

LOVE-MATCH-CHALLENGE

Marriage can be one of the most exciting and rewarding journeys of life. It can also be one of the most challenging and costly, mentally, emotionally and financially. If it all comes down to whom you choose how can you increase your confidence in choosing “the right one?”

The obvious answer for most is dating, but is that working?

During those first dates and interactions, our natural tendency is to be on our best behavior with the goal of impressing one another, rather than just being ourselves.

Even online match-making companies recognize that a large gap exists in qualifying candidates. They have found that many people will state something about themselves on the application that really isn't true of who they are as much as who they perceive themselves to be. And the first few dates are really not good indicators of how a person will confront real-life situations and challenges. In a Michigan State University study it was shown that married couples who had met online were three times more likely to divorce compared to those who met in person. (Based on a study pool of 4000 couples who had met online.)

The Bible says that, “Love is patient. Love is kind. Love does not envy, it does not boast, is not self-seeking, not easily angered, keeps no records of wrongs.” If that is really love, then what is the cause for so many failed marriages when everyone begins their relationship on the basis of “falling in Love?”

The Love-Match-Challenge project is designed to discover the essentials of love through experiential events and activities that identify reactions to different situations. Through an intensive program of activities and engaging games, the participants are helped to take off their masks and reveal themselves. By increasing self-awareness, any relationship has a better chance of becoming stronger and deeper.

If you are single, you are invited to participate in a two day retreat facilitated by the leading specialists on experiential learning in the world. These adventurous retreats are tailored to meet other singles and to engage in fun activities and role games that will provide opportunities to penetrate through the typical first date facade revealing the real personality and increasing emotional intelligence.

If you are in a dating relationship, our retreats will be very instructive by introducing you to circumstances and unplanned situations that will expedite the process of knowing each other's core values and developing a life-long friendship based on reality and not on illusion.
